THE CHURCHES AND TO-DAY'S SERVICES

Samuel, the Victorious Leader

REV. FLOYD W. TOMKINS. Text-1 Samuel, vii. 3-17.

It is a difficult thing for a man ac-quietly taught the people and urged sin may return to righteousness them to live rightly. Then he called Sprinkle with Thy precious blood, oh ing and drew near to attack the Israel. Oh, give us all, and give even to me ites, but God discomfited them and they the assurance that as hitherto the Lore ezer, saying: "Hitherto hath the Lord EDUCATIONAL CONGRESS helped us," prayers and worship and guidance. That is the secret of all our great conven-tions. Every church has its annual gathering of representatives of its

HEMINDER OF DUTY
One of the most striking lessons is the setting up of the great stone by Samuel. Phillips Brooks has a wonderful sermon on "The Stone of Shechem (Joshna xxiv, 27), which is well worth reading. This stone which Joshna set up seems to correspond to the stone which Samuel set up. It was to be sign to the people that God would be them, and also that they were to ricke their vows to Him. One can limit the wevery time a Jew saw this great stone near Mispah, he would remove the sound that they were to ricke their vows to Him. One can limit the how every time a Jew saw this great stone near Mispah, he would remove the sound that they were to mister to human welfare. If His words were to mister to human welfare. If His words were to mister to human welfare. If the same there is sown duty and God's loving the commence of the corresponding to the people that God would be them, and also that they were to mister to human welfare. If His would have every time a Jew saw this great stone near Mispah, he would remove the sown duty and God's loving the wear of the minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare to minister to human welfare to minister to human welfare. If His words were to minister to human welfare to minister to

This is particularly true of the Bible. Every time we hold this sacred book in our hands we should remember how God from the very first has cared for tis people and how He has promised to care for them to the end. Thank God for these dear modern Ebenezers which COMMUNION WITH GOD I have often been impressed by the And the action is particularly difficult wice blessed, for we who pray find great comfort in communion with God, when he has to inspire a multitude of and those for whom we pray are blessed according to His promise. Let us never format the contract of the second secon forget the joy and power of interces-sory prayer.

our hands we should remember how God from the very first has cared for this people and how life has promised to care for them to the end. Thank God for these dear modern Ebonezers which strengthen our faith and inspire us with courage! What could we do without them?

One lessen more comes to us in the last three verses (15 to 17). Samuel visited the people from year to year, while he kept his home in Ramah and worshiped and prayed in his home (for that is the meaning of his setting up an altar) for the people whom he loved. It is a heautiful picture of the prophet and judge, going from place to place to
